

Fly Me to the Moon ... Gladly

Who would have thought that air travel circa 2005 could be less taxing than juggling a drink and a samosa at a cocktail party? Not I, until I took my first-ever flight aboard a private chartered jet courtesy of Private Jet Services Group (PJS). The Hampton, N.H. — based company specializes in corporate clients, including incentive and meeting groups, and luxury leisure travelers.

Flying on a VIP-configured jet translates into first-class seats for everyone and represents “best practices,” says PJS President Greg Raiff, as “planners can deliver significantly greater value” compared to flying on commercial airlines. Everyone in our group of FICP planners seemed very happy with the experience. I know I was, with legroom befitting an NBA center, great food and amenities, and no lines or baggage hassles.

— JW

Joan Westreich is a New York City — based business writer.